NYO&W Scranton Division by Peter Brill

The Scranton Division's infrastructure has been covered extensively before, in pictorial form. The Scranton Observer, Auto Guide, Mayfield Yard and Carbondale Viaduct, all publications of the O&W RHS, were basically picture books. There is also the Morning Sun color book. Many of those interested in the Scranton Division at this late date will have these publications in their library and can refer to them for photographs of its construction, the bridges and trestles, etc.

Helmer and Karig have covered some historical aspects. These volumes will attempt to provide a much more text-based, in-depth history and analysis of the Scranton Division as it was most commonly known...

The Middletown and Unionville, successor to the Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap Railroad, operated from December 1, 1913, until May 31, 1946, when it was reorganized as the Middletown and New Jersey Railway.

Douglas Barberio is a founding member of the Middletown and New Jersey Railway Historical Society and has served in various capacities as an officer and trustee. He is currently coeditor for the society's quarterly newsletter, the Unionville Flyer, and has written a number of articles for the publication. He has presented many lectures on the railroads that formerly operated in the tristate area around Orange County.
